Fabiana and Mumford

I was born in Brazil and one of the first lessons that I learned as a child in school was the importance of the food chain and the interdependency of all beings. This lesson became my guiding principle for life. Throughout my professional career and personal life, I have had the opportunity to incorporate sustainability concepts in mostly everything I do and the causes I join. I spent most of my career as an architect and later in the movement building space for environmental and social corporate responsibility. I am the loving guardian of a Goldendoodle named Mumford, with whom I have enjoyed the most beautiful and inspiring moments in the presence of nature.

Dr. Emily Bryson and Bailey

I'm a university science lecturer, researcher, backyard gardener, and lifelong dog lover living with my bestie/partner Matt and our charming King Charles Cavalier, Bailey. Originally from the USA, I migrated to Australia nearly 20 years ago. While earning my PhD in Environmental Science I explored how we can safely compost dog poo at home and even use it in our edible home gardens. As a dog mum and an expert in this field, I have a deep understanding of the challenges pet owners face when managing waste. My work as a scientist, contributor to EPWN, and now as an EPWN board member aims to provide practical, evidence-based solutions that help dog guardians and communities transform pet waste into something environmentally beneficial rather than sending it to landfill.

Looking Ahead

Our first webinar of 2026 will be in February on Debunking Common Myths Around Home Composting Dog Poo!
